David Cotterrell: telegraph.co.uk: ..staggering history of suffering telegraph.co.uk/telegraphblogs/arts

Date: 9th January 2009

Wellcome Trusts Exhibition of War and Medicine: staggering history of suffering

Visitors may find some images in this exhibition disturbing. How often onehas seen this sign, and breezed past, smug in the knowledge that it onlyreferred to some puerile bit of pornography or the sort of grisly jokinesspeddled by Tracey Emin or Damien Hirst. Shockable, moi?

But here is an exhibition where the conventional warning is necessary: Ireeled out of War and Medicine shaking - my stomach churning, my headspinning, my knees knocking. Images of what I saw have been recurring inmy dreams and creeping up on me unawares during the day. It displays, with exemplary clarity and an absence of sensationalism, a trulystaggering history of a hundred and fifty years of appalling humansuffering and of equally inspiring human ingenuity and compassion.

We start with the Crimean War. Here is Alexis Soyers Field Stove, aninvention which allowed the fresh preparation of food on battlegrounds and in its way brought as much relief to soldiers as Florence Nightingaleshygiene. Here are mementoes of Nikolai Pirogov, pioneer of the practice oftriage and anesthesia, and Brunels designs for Renkioi, an entirely prefabricatedhospital.

From the First World War, there is some heart-rending material devoted to the art of facial reconstruction, in which Queen Marys Hospital in Sidcupwas prominent, and some remarkable newsreel footage from the RoyalArmy Medical Corps, showing among much else the wounded beingpiggybacked by their pals and the hospital barges in which the severecases were transported to avoid the agony of jolting carts on potholedroads. I was also fascinated by a propaganda film about preventivedentistry Id never realized how many recruits were rejected on account of their bad teeth!

The Second World War sees the development of penicillin (producing whichwas initially a labour-intensive process of meticulous complexity) setagainst the horrors of Nazi medicine and its chilling to see how manyGerman doctors implicated in ghastly experiments and cruelties continued to practise and flourish into the 1960s. On a slightly lighter note, I loved aquaint information film put out in 1943 by the Womens Auxiliary Air Force, advising the ladies about the perils of gonorrhoea, sometimes called theclap and syphilis, sometimes called the pox, as the narrator briskly putsit in her cut-glass tones.

But perhaps what I found most stunning of all is an installation by DavidCotterrell, an artist sent by the Wellcome Trust to Afghanistan. This is adarkened room in which video reproduces the sensation of being a sedatedwounded soldier taken to a hospital inside the hold of an RAF Hercules the combination of haze and noise make this quite terrifying. Theres much else including displays relating to psychological disorders and prostheses in this deeply absorbing and magnificently mounted exhibition. Not to be missed, if you think your nerves can take it.

Rupert Christiansen Jan 9, 2009 at 11:40:53

Web Page Layout Credit: Rupert Christiansen (2009)