

David Cotterrell: Guardian G2 : Bloody Reality

Date: 25th November 2008

Copyright Status: David Cotterrell, The Guardian

A four-page photo-essay published in the G2 section of the Guardian Newspaper on 25th November, 2008.

This article was produced by Charlotte Northedge, G2 Features Editor and has been made available for viewing by kind permission of The Guardian newspaper. Copyright is retained by the authors and publishers.

This file may be viewed with Adobe Acrobat Reader.

Bloody reality

Last year, the artist David Cotterrell went to Afghanistan to observe the work of military medical staff at the main field hospital at Camp Bastion. His diary and photographs, seen on show in London, are a harrowing reminder of the cost of war.

David Cotterrell is a British artist and writer who has spent the last year in Afghanistan, observing the work of military medical staff at the main field hospital at Camp Bastion. His diary and photographs, seen on show in London, are a harrowing reminder of the cost of war.

David Cotterrell is a British artist and writer who has spent the last year in Afghanistan, observing the work of military medical staff at the main field hospital at Camp Bastion. His diary and photographs, seen on show in London, are a harrowing reminder of the cost of war.

Page Layout from Article Credit: David Cotterrell, The Guardian (2009)